Read 'Pulls' The Fee-rocious Badger.

The social event of the season, an old time "badger-fight," was pulled off last Thursday evening. Cashier P. J. Read, of the First National Bank, "pulled" the fee-rocious badger, with about 150 enthusiastic fans of the game in attendance, including several auto loads of ladies, who were mighty anxious to see the "fight".
The big badger scared the dog and that animal run off, thus spoiling a mighty good show for a scrap, but Mr. Read certainly is some "puller." The badger is still in evidence at the barber shop and there is a likelihood of another fight soon.—Fort Sumner Leader.

Washington, D. C., June 10, 1916.—I have a limited number of copies of the final report of the Commission on Industrial Relations, also a number of copies of the Agricultural Year Book of 1915, which is the latest published, and shall be pleased to send them to any one to whom they may be of interest.

Yours very truly,

Work Begins on Highway

A working crew of several men, teams and tools drove in Monday morning to begin work on the State Highway between this place and Roswell via the Acme bridge which is now under construction. When this stretch of road is built it will complete the road from El Paso to Roswell, Amarillo and eastern cities. This will turn the auto traffic straight through by way of Kenna instead of seeking a southern route as is the case now and has been for years.

The output of New Mexico mines in 1916, as reported by the United States Geological Survey had a value of more than $19,000,000. Mr. Charles W. Henderson of the Denver office of the Survey gives the detailed production as $1,461,005 in gold, 2,005,531 ounces of silver, 76,788,366 pounds of copper, 4,542,361 pounds of lead, and 25,404,061 pounds of zinc (in terms of spelter and zinc in zinc oxide). These figures show an increase of $289,309 in gold, 228,086 ounces of silver, 17,000,672 pounds of copper, 2,778,720 pounds of lead, and 7,000,672 pounds of zinc. The value of the metals, except silver was higher than in 1914, the total being $19,279,368, against $11,049,932 in 1914, an increase of $8,229,436.

Republican opposition to Woodrow Wilson manifests itself in much talk in Congress and out, but when one of the Wilson administration measures comes to a vote, even the Republicans dare not oppose it. The Rural Credits bill passed the Senate with only five votes against it; there were only nays in the House of Representatives. Yet no rural credits bill even reached a vote under republican rule. That is a circumstance that the farmers of the nation will not forget.

In his speech to the National Press Club, President Wilson based his hope of the ultimate salvation of the world on the disinterested men and women who inhabit it. If it were possible to analyze the faith that the American people have in Woodrow Wilson, it would be discovered that his disinterestedness is his greatest asset. The people do not believe that he "plays the game" for what he can get out of it for himself. They do believe that he is in public life to do public service, and that he is their good and faithful servant.
